

Treatment of Burns

Until now the management of burns caused by fire, explosion, chemical accidents, etc. has been gravely limited. Often only water and ice are available from emergency treatment, but these harbor the constant danger of hypothermic tissue damage.

Furthermore, since ice and iced water are nonsterile they increase the risk of infection. Yet another disadvantage is the awkward application of ice and ice water. During use, it melts or drips, and the localized cooling effect is rapidly lost. Even cold packs do not ensure the desired effect. These have to be refrigerated in order to provide the cooling actions, and as such they are not immediately ready for use. The chemicals they contain rule out direct contact with the burned area. Since they do not adapt to body contours they require additional retention. Treatment of extensive burns is virtually impossible due to the limited sizes of conventional cold packs.

Unlike cold packs and ice, AfterBURN Sterile Burn Dressings are ready for use instantly. The cooling action is caused by evaporation, eliminating the need for previous refrigeration.

Made from a 96% gel-saturated polished non-woven polyester, AfterBURN Sterile Burn Dressings draw heat away from the burn. This provides a cooling effect which lasts for up to eight hours. To enhance the cooling effect, dressings may also be precooled.

AfterBURN Sterile Burn Dressings are designed to help relieve pain while at the same time also helping to prevent spread of the burn. Suitable for the treatment of 1st, 2nd and 3rd degree burns.
